

Hello everyone!

Today, I am going to talk about something very special.

This video will help you in two ways.

First way: It will improve your English listening.

Your English will become better.

Second way: This video will also help you in your real life.

The message in this video can change your life.

Today's topic is: "Don't Waste Your Time."

Time is very important.

It is the most important thing in life.

Why? Because you can never get time back.

Once time is gone, it is gone forever.

Think about it.

If you lose money, you can earn it again.

If you lose friends, you can make new friends.

But time? No. You cannot bring it back.

That's why we need to stop wasting time.

In this video, I will teach you how to use your time wisely.

And while you learn this, you will also practice your English.

I have divided this video into three parts.

Part one: Why do we waste time?

Part two: How can we stop wasting time?

Part three: What action should you take today?

In each part, I will give you real-life examples.

These examples are from everyday life.

So you can easily understand and remember them.

First, let's understand: Why do we waste time?

Let's go to Part one.

Let's start with a simple question: Why do we waste time?

Most people don't plan to waste time.

Nobody wakes up and thinks, "Today, I will waste my whole day."

But it still happens.

Why?

Because we don't understand the value of time.

We don't realize how important it is.

Let me give you an example.

Think about a student.

He has an exam in three months.

On day one, he thinks, "I have so much time. I will start studying next week."

Next week comes.

He thinks again, "Still plenty of time. I will start next month."

Then suddenly, only one week is left.

Now he panics.

He is stressed.

He sleeps only three hours.

He tries to study three months of work in seven days.

Sound familiar?

This is called procrastination.

It means delaying important work.

And it is one of the biggest time-wasters.

Here is another example.

You have a friend.

This friend always says, "Let's meet up sometime."

But "sometime" never comes.

Weeks become months.

Months become years.

And you realize you haven't seen that friend in forever.

Why?

Because "sometime" is not a real plan.

It's just a nice way of saying "never."

The truth is, we waste time in three main ways.

Number one: We procrastinate.

We delay important tasks.

We say, "I will do it later."

Number two: We say yes to everything.

We agree to do things that don't matter.

We don't want to disappoint others.

So we waste our time on things we don't care about.

Number three: We distract ourselves.

We spend hours on social media.

We watch random videos.

We do things that add no value to our lives.

Remember this:

Tomorrow is a thief.

It steals today from you.

If you keep saying "I will do it tomorrow," you will never do it.

So, in Part one, we learned why we waste time.

We procrastinate.

We can't say no.

And we distract ourselves.

Now, let's move to Part two.

In Part two, I will show you exactly how to stop wasting your time.

Let's go!

PART number 2: PRACTICAL STRATEGIES - HOW TO STOP WASTING TIME

Alright!

Now you understand the problem.

But understanding is not enough.

We need solutions!

In this part, I will give you five practical strategies.

You can use these starting today.

These will help you stop wasting your time.

Let's begin!

[Strategy Number 1]

Strategy number one: Set Clear Goals

You cannot manage your time if you don't know what you want.

Think of your life like a ship.

If the ship has no destination, it will just float around forever.

But if it has a clear destination, the captain can go directly there.

Real-life example:

Let's say you want to improve your English.

That's good, but it's too vague.

Instead, set a clear goal.

Say: "I want to reach B2 level in six months."

Or: "I want to watch an English movie without subtitles by December."

See the difference?

Now you have a target.

Now you can create a plan.

[Strategy Number 2]

Strategy number two: Learn to Say No

This is difficult for many people.

We don't want to disappoint others.

But here's the truth:

Every time you say yes to something unimportant, you are saying no to something important.

Real-life example:

Your cousin invites you to a wedding.

You don't know the bride or groom.

You don't really want to go.

But you think, "If I don't go, people will think I'm rude."

So you spend six hours at that wedding.

Six hours!

Meanwhile, you had important work to do.

You had a book to read.

Or quality time to spend with your children.

Was it worth it? Probably not.

Learning to say no is very powerful.

You can say: "Thank you for inviting me, but I have a prior commitment."

A simple, polite no is enough.

[Strategy Number 3]

Strategy number three: Use the Eighty-Twenty Rule

This is also called the Pareto Principle.

It says: Eighty percent of your results come from twenty percent of your efforts.

In simple words: Not all tasks are equally important.

Real-life example:

Let's say you're a business owner.

You spend your day answering emails, organizing files, attending meetings.

And also working on getting new clients.

But if you look carefully, getting new clients brings you eighty percent of your income.

The other tasks only give you twenty percent.

So, what should you focus on?

The twenty percent that matters most.

Getting new clients.

The same applies to everything.

If you're studying English, focus on the twenty percent that gives you eighty percent results.

What is that?

Speaking practice and listening to real conversations.

Not memorizing word lists you will never use.

[Strategy Number 4]

Strategy number four: Eliminate Distractions

Let me ask you something.

When you sit down to study or work, how many times do you check your phone?

Be honest!

Research shows: The average person checks their phone ninety-six times per day.

That's once every ten minutes!

Real-life example:

A girl sits down to study.

She opens her book.

Then – ping! – a notification comes on her phone.

It's a message from her friend.

She replies quickly.

She thinks it will only take a second.

But then she sees Instagram notifications.

She opens Instagram "just for a minute."

Thirty minutes later, she realizes she hasn't studied at all.

What's the solution?

When you need to focus, put your phone in another room.

Turn off all notifications.

Tell yourself: "For the next one hour, I will only focus on this one task."

You will be amazed at how much you can accomplish.

[Strategy Number 5]

Strategy number five: Use Time Blocking

Time blocking means you assign specific hours to specific tasks.

Don't just make a to-do list.

Make a time-do list!

Real-life example:

Let's say you want to exercise, study English, work on a project, and spend time with family.

Don't just write these down.

Instead, block time for each one:

Six AM to seven AM: Exercise

Eight AM to twelve PM: Work

One PM to two PM: English study

Seven PM to nine PM: Family time

When one PM comes, you know exactly what you should be doing.

No confusion.

No wasting time deciding what to do next.

These five strategies are powerful.

Set clear goals.

Learn to say no.

Use the eighty-twenty rule.

Eliminate distractions.

Use time blocking.

But knowing them is not enough.

You have to actually use them.

Which brings us to Part three: Taking action in your real life.

Let's go!

PART number 3: TAKING ACTION - APPLYING THIS TO YOUR REAL LIFE

So, we talked about why we waste time.

And we learned practical strategies to stop it.

But now comes the most important part:

What are you going to do about it?

Knowledge without action is useless.

It's like having a gym membership but never going to the gym.

It's like buying healthy food but never eating it.

The information I gave you today is valuable.

But only if you use it.

Here's what I want you to do after watching this video.

Action step one:

Take out a piece of paper.

Write down three goals you want to achieve in the next six months.

Be specific.

Not "I want to be successful."

That's too vague.

Instead, write:

"I want to lose ten kilograms."

"I want to save fifty thousand rupees."

"I want to have a ten-minute conversation in English without getting nervous."

Action step two:

Identify one habit that's wasting your time.

Is it social media?

Is it oversleeping?

Is it saying yes to too many people?

Pick one. Just one.

And commit to changing it this week.

Action step three:

Use time blocking for tomorrow.

Right now, before you go to sleep tonight, plan your entire day tomorrow.

Assign specific tasks to specific hours.

And then follow that plan.

If you do these three things, you will already be ahead of ninety percent of people.

Most people will watch this video, think "That's nice," and then do nothing.

Don't be like most people.

Let me end with this thought:

Time is not money.

Time is life.

When you waste time, you're not just losing hours.

You're losing pieces of your life that you can never get back.

Every moment that passes is a moment you'll never have again.

So ask yourself:

How do you want to spend your life?

Scrolling through your phone?

Sleeping too much?

Doing things that don't matter?

Or do you want to spend it building something meaningful?

Learning, growing, and becoming the best version of yourself?

The choice is yours.

But whatever you choose, choose now.

Don't wait for tomorrow.

Don't wait for the "right time."

The right time is always now.

Remember:

Your time is valuable.

Don't waste it.

Take action today.

Not tomorrow. Today.
